

Re-Imagine

Re-imagining may lead to understanding something in a new way. Re-imagining calls for us to “Consult not your fears but your hopes and your dreams. Think not about your frustrations, but about your unfulfilled potential. Concern yourself not with what you tried and failed in, but with what it is still possible for you to do.” John XXIII

This Spiritual Capability may involve:

- Re-examining a situation and coming to a new meaning
- Examining the endless possibilities
- Examining possible benefits of things not going to plan
- Looking beyond the obvious.

Examples of educators promoting this capability could be when they:

- Create opportunities for students to imagine
- Encourage consistent use of imagination
- Include the skills of considering a variety of plausible options
- Bring imagining to alternative interpretations of scripture
- Planning for several outcomes to a problem
- Providing a classroom culture that allows risk in a safe way
- Welcoming others thoughts and interpretations and that they may in fact invite an individual to re-evaluate what and how they think about something.
